
A modest diagnosis of India's infrastructure woes

By Niraj Dawar

I just got back from Hong Kong, and on the way back I stopped in India, as I usually do.

India had been on a tear, economically speaking, for much of the first decade of this century, but appears to have paused for a breather over the last few months. Things are a tad slower than the frenzied pace of just a few years ago; the confidence (hubris?) has mellowed just a little; the shine – well, India's shine was always in the eye of the beholder.

>> Read the full article in Just Marketing; the author retains all rights.

Find article at

<https://knowledge.insead.edu/marketing/modest-diagnosis-indias-infrastructure-woes>

About the author(s)

Niraj Dawar I am the Barford Professor of Marketing at the Ivey Business School, Canada.